Left Behind: The Forgotten Faces of Rural Education in Africa

Alvin Karanja

C025-01-0824/2022

Information Technology

"While the world advances, thousands of African children still learn without walls, desks, or books."

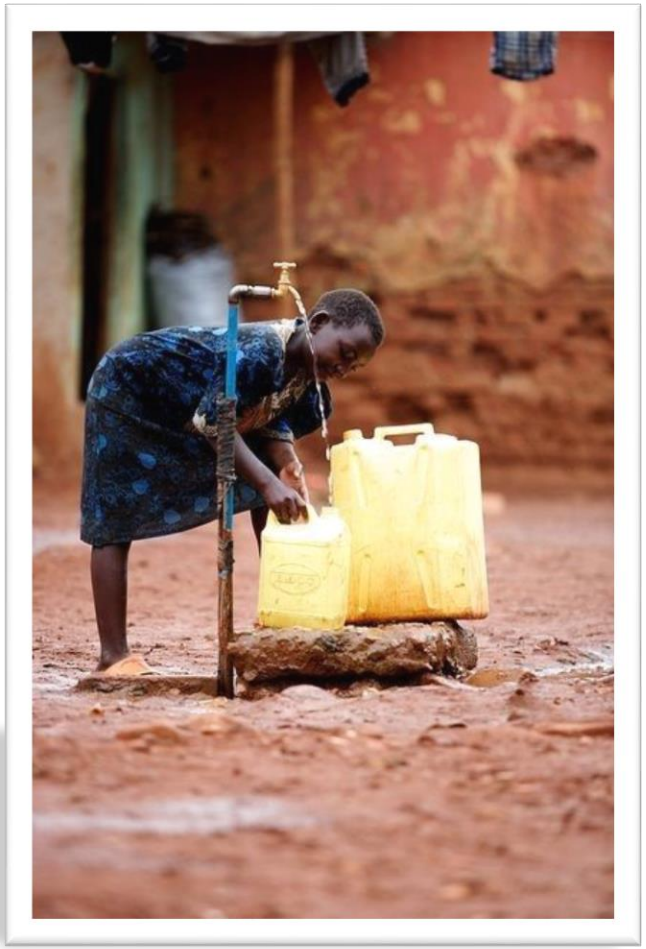
"Every morning, before the sun rises, children begin long treks to reach their nearest school."

"Broken walls, leaking roofs, and overcrowded classes—education dreams are built on crumbling foundations."

"One book, ten hands resources are so scarce that learning becomes a privilege, not a right."

"Despite the odds, passionate teachers continue to educate with heart, chalk, and hope."

"In many rural homes, girls are expected to fetch water and cook, sacrificing their future for tradition."



"Change is coming, slow but steady. Communities are rising to build a better tomorrow for their children."

"Education brings light these children dream of becoming doctors, teachers, and leaders."

"No child should be left behind. It's time to invest in education for every African child, no matter where they live."